Résumé

The LPM serves as the primary liaison with key stakeholders throughout all phases of learning projects. This includes initial discussions on learning solution requirements, project scoping, through to the final delivery and project conclusion. The goal is to establish and nurture trust with stakeholders, fostering a continuous business relationship.

About the Role

The Learning Project Manager (LPM) role is pivotal within the GBS LEARNING team. The LPM serves as the primary liaison with key stakeholders throughout all phases of learning projects. This includes initial discussions on learning solution requirements, project scoping, through to the final delivery and project conclusion. The goal is to establish and nurture trust with stakeholders, fostering a continuous business relationship.

The LPM is a seasoned and resourceful expert in Learning & Development (L&D), adept at operating in multicultural, global, and complex environments, and skilled in engaging with global senior stakeholders.

Responsible for delivering business learning solutions, the LPM leverages a profound understanding and extensive experience in adult learning theory, learning design principles, L&D best practices, and the latest trends. They are also proficient in project management methodologies.

The LPM is adaptable and flexible, thrives in ambiguous and evolving environments, and is decisive and autonomous, all while contributing to a dynamic, high-performance team.

Lastly, the LPM is curious and tech-savvy, an early adopter of digital tools, and has substantial experience with both basic-user and advanced software, programs, and web-based tools.

Some responsibilities of the LPM include, but are not limited to:

- Conduct comprehensive learning needs analysis to identify skill and capability gaps.
- Scope and/or rescoping learning projects, ensuring clear and detailed project plans, learning objectives, specific timelines, and top-quality deliverables.
- Apply adult learning principles and L&D best practices to enhance learner engagement.
- Utilize project management methodologies and tools to ensure efficient project execution.
- Maintain clear and consistent communication with global partners and stakeholders.
- Foster sustainable relationships with internal and external collaborators.
- Develop and manage evaluation strategies to measure learning outcomes.
- Oversee the localization and translation of learning materials for diverse audiences.
- Manage vendor selection processes to align with project requirements.

- Design, prepare and deliver 'Train-the-Trainer' sessions to empower internal trainers.
- Keep abreast of the latest trends in Learning Systems and Technologies.
- Implement learning-oriented sites to support in-house education.
- Lead the development of Learning projects, coordinating efforts at regional or global levels.
- Collaborate with L&D super user communities across regions.
- Share project management best practices to enhance team performance.
